Director's Annual Report 2015

Overview

In 2015 SIPRI continued to deliver as one of the world's leading research centres focusing on international conflict, peace, armaments and disarmament as well as security and development. This was recognized in the global ranking of think tanks carried out by the University of Pennsylvania, which early in 2015 once again placed SIPRI in the very top echelon, this time as the sixth most influential think tank in the world in all categories.

One important reason for this success is the commitment to providing transparent and reliable information through SIPRI's globally unique databases, which are the foundation of much of our analysis and expert commentary. The second reason is the broad scope of SIPRI's research into issues related to peace and security. The third reason is the investment in dissemination and outreach through SIPRI's publications and events. None of this would have been possible without the foundations upon which it rests – the hard and excellent work of the Institute's researchers and support staff.

2015 was for SIPRI a year of transition and preparations for the celebration of its first 50 years in 2016. In March 2015 I had the privilege to be appointed to lead SIPRI as its ninth Director. I assumed office in September and would like to express my sincere thanks to Dr Ian Anthony who led the Institute for more than a year as interim Director. Further, SIPRI spent most of the second half of the year in temporary premises while its premises were renovated and moved back to its premises in Frösunda in Solna in December; SIPRI has thus upgraded its physical infrastructure to be on par with its world class reputation.

Research

In 2015 SIPRI continued to produce balanced and accurate research in the thematic areas in which it is well-known, including international security,

Stockholm International Peace Research Institute

Organization no: 802006-2660

armed conflict, conflict management, peace operations, military expenditure, arms production, international arms transfers, dual-use and arms trade controls, non-proliferation, and arms control and disarmament.

One interesting new area of research that started in 2015 was the study into various aspects of LAWS (Lethal Autonomous Weapons Systems). This stream of work began early in the year with a review of definitions and government positions of the matter, continued to assess legal aspects of LAWS in a second project, and was by late 2015 developing towards an overall mapping of the state of technical development of these weapons systems. It's a pleasure to see how this work follows the example established at SIPRI over the years of uncovering and studying previously unrecognised issues and areas of armaments.

Moreover, SIPRI's newer areas of research, focussing mainly on issues related to the drivers of conflict in fragile and resource poor settings, have also continued to thrive. One example is the Programme on Security and Development, which followed the process towards the adoption of the Sustainable Development Goals for 2030 closely, and another is a field research project that ended in a comprehensive report on the state of the Private Sector in Afghanistan. A strong illustration of the dynamism in these streams of research was the successful second "Stockholm Forum on Security and Development" in May 2015.

Publications

SIPRI published 22 titles in 2015, including 6 on behalf of the European Union Non-Proliferation Consortium. Formats, issues and titles varied. Most importantly the SIPRI Yearbook 2015 was issued, SIPRI's flagship publication. It serves as the most trusted and respected, single authoritative and independent source on armaments, disarmament and international security.

The Yearbook is published through the Oxford University Press (OUP) and it has since 2010 also included an online version. Full translations of the SIPRI Yearbook were also published in Arabic, Chinese, Russian and Ukrainian, and summaries were issued in Catalan, Dutch, English, French, German, Italian, Spanish and Swedish, all representing the global appeal of the Yearbook and the core work of SIPRI. Among SIPRI's other publications, one monograph was published by OUP on 'Nuclear Forensics: Analysis of Nuclear Materials for Security Purposes'.

Organization no: 802006-2660

Media

In 2015 the Institute continued frequent outreach and communication activities with a continuation of public events, targeted mailings and campaigns and social media presence. During 2015, SIPRI was covered in more than 16 800 stories in over 1 500 global media outlets in 96 countries. At the end of 2015, SIPRI counted more than 23 300 followers on Twitter and more than 13 000 on Facebook. Moreover, SIPRI issued 9 major press releases, 11 expert comments by SIPRI researchers and 11 essays in conjunction with the monthly SIPRI Update.

Key media launches in 2015 included:

- The launch of SIPRI's data on international arms transfers in March, which was covered by more than 2 700 media outlets.
- The launch of SIPRI's military expenditure data launch in April, which was profiled in more than 1 700 media outlets.
- The launch of SIPRI's nuclear force data was in June, which cited in over 1 100 media outlets.
- The early launch of SIPRI's Top 100 for 2014 in December, which saw coverage in over 1 400 media outlets.

Other notable events included:

- A launch event on SIPRI's monograph 'Security Activities of External Actors in Africa' in cooperation with the United Nations Economic Commission in Africa (UNECA) and the Institute for Peace and Security Studies (IPSS) in Addis Ababa in April.

- A panel discussion entitled 'Promoting a Successful Outcome of the 2015 NPT Review Conference' on the opening day of the 2015 Review Conference of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) at the United Nations in New York in cooperation with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Sweden in April.
- The second 'Stockholm Forum on Security and Development - Promotion of sustainable peace' with more than 150 policymakers, researchers and practitioners gathered in Stockholm on 12-13 May, co-hosted with the Swedish Ministry for Foreign Affairs.
- The launch of a strategic vision for civil society's contribution to the Malian peace process in cooperation with partner CONASCIPAL in Bamako, Mali, in September.
- A High-Level Panel discussion: 'Perspectives on disarmament and the continued relevance of the recommendations of the Blix Commission' in cooperation with the Swedish Ministry for Foreign Affairs at the UN in New York in October.

Finance and administration

With regard to SIPRI's finances, 2015 was a seemingly very successful year and it is true that the almost 1 400 000 SEK in surplus is a much welcome relief after two years in the red. However, most of that surplus is already factored in for outstanding costs related to the renovation which need to be serviced in the first part of 2016. Accordingly, as well as maintaining strict cost control, we shall continue the quest to broaden and expand SIPRI's funding base.

The overall turnover for 2015 also increased slightly over the average in the last few years, and totalled 55 250 000 SEK. The bedrock of our finances is the un-earmarked and generous core grant from the Swedish government; without it SIPRI would not have been able to sustain its important mission. The proportion of external grants to the overall turnover of SIPRI remained at 55 per cent, which shows that external funding income remains a stable pillar of the Institute's finances.

Stockholm International Peace Research Institute

Organization no: 802006-2660

Discussions continued within the Governing Board, as well as with external stakeholders, to explore options to broaden SIPRI's core donor base to private donors in Sweden, and beyond. This is a long process where further important progress was made in 2015, which will hopefully bear fruit in the anniversary year 2016.

Finally, much work at SIPRI in 2015 went into the planning and successful implementation of the renovation of SIPRI's main premises. This included two moves for all SIPRI staff during the year, as the Institute had to temporarily relocate from June to November, a lot of weeding out of old material, and it required flexibility for our visitors and stakeholders. It was a real pleasure to see the patience and flexibility of the SIPRI staff, and it was particularly gratifying to see that the timetable for this makeover was kept. Contrary to the expectations of many the Institute was able to re-open in shiny new offices a couple of weeks ahead of the anniversary year, all according to plan.

Governance

SIPRI continues to benefit from strong leadership through its Governing Board. The interactions of the Institute with all Governing Board members have been intense during the year and their vision and support have enabled the Institute to maintain its standing in the world. Board members notably participated actively in the Director recruitment process, and they were very supportive both during the interim period and to myself as a new Director.

In October 2015 the Deputy Chairman Ambassador Jayantha Dhanapala completed his second and final term on the Board. I wish to extend my sincere thanks to Jayantha for his wisdom, experience and outstanding commitment to SIPRI over these years. We will miss him dearly on the Board.

Outlook

In summary, SIPRI continued in 2015 to serve global audiences with well-respected, unbiased and authoritative research in ways that re-confirmed its position as a world leading research institute focusing on international peace and security. However, in order to remain relevant and world leading we may not become complacent, and we need to permanently re-assess and develop SIPRI's focus, research and activities.

Stockholm International Peace Research Institute

In 2015, as a new Director, I was only able to identify the broad outlines of a strategy to assure SIPRI's continued relevance and success. I have branded the 50th anniversary year a 'year of reflection' where I invite all who take an interest in SIPRI to make their contributions on where the Institute ought to go from now. In this endeavour I much look forward to working together with the SIPRI Governing Board, with all the dedicated researchers and staff at SIPRI, and with all our friends in Sweden and around the world.

SIPRI's mission was minted in 1966. It went into the statutes that govern SIPRI's work to this day; that the Institute shall conduct 'scientific research on questions of conflict and co-operation of importance for international peace and security, with the aim of contributing to an understanding of the conditions for peaceful solutions of international conflicts and for a stable peace.'

It's with some humility that I need to conclude this report with the thought that much work still remains to be done.
